Whatever Happened To . . .

. . . Ralph W. Polk? Being a school trained printer, I was brought up reading Mr. Polk's text books. When I had a question about something recently, I grabbed one of his books knowing I would find the answer there. This got me wondering if he's still alive and if so, where could I get in touch with him. I owe him a great deal and just wanted to thank him.

If you're not familiar with Mr. Polk's books, I suggest you seek them out, even though I'm sure they're now out of print. One of his best: The Practice of Printing, The Manual Arts Press, Peoria, Illinois.

More Detective Work

The Golding press I mentioned in the last issue, revealed some interesting clues as to one of its previous owners. From the packing and draw sheet still on the press, I have deduced the following: the press was owned around 1968 by John Metesic in Lyons, Illinois. Does anyone remember this fellow being a member of any amateur press association?

Table Top Presses

Without even trying, I have developed a pretty good collection of table top presses. I now own seven different ones: a 3 x 5 Kelsey, a 5 x 8 Kelsey, a 6 x 9 Columbian, a 6 x 9 Golding, a 5 x 8 Model, a 6 x 9 Sigwalt, and a 6 x 9 Dorman. Having such a nice collection so easily, I thought I might put some effort into developing a really outstanding collection. If you have a table top press, different from those listed above, and are willing to part with it, please contact me. I'll need to know the make, chase size, condition, and price.

Printer's Pi

We met with quite an accident
just as we went to press,
The foreman dropped a lot of type
and made a fearful mess,
He had not time to fix it up
So he didn't even try,
But gave the readers one and all
A piece of printer's pi.

The Leadstaker is published by John Horn at 7801 Westwood Ave., Little Rock, AR 72204. This issue printed on a 10 x 15 C & P. Type used in this issue was Huxley Vertical, Airport Medium, and Goudy Modern. I'll let the reader try to figure out what was used in the poem!
